

My Strengths List Worksheet

Five steps: tick the strengths that fit, back up your top five, hear from someone else, use one on purpose, and spot where one might be overdone.

01 Tick the strengths that sound like you

Sixty positive traits in five groups. Tick anything that fits you more often than not. There's no right number, and you don't need to be the best at it.

Any strengths of mine that aren't on the list:

02 Evidence for my top 5

Pick the five ticks that feel most like you. For each one, write a real moment you showed it. Specific beats impressive: 'I sat with my sister in A&E all night' counts.

Strength

A time I showed it

When, where, what I did

03 What others would say

Ask one person you trust: 'What do you think I'm good at, as a person?' Write down what they say before you argue with it.

Who I asked, and what they said:

Did they name something I didn't tick? What do I make of that?

04 A strength I'll use on purpose this week

Choose one of your top five and use it in a way you don't normally. If you're curious, try a new café or a podcast on a subject you know nothing about. If you're kind, do one thing for a stranger.

The strength I'll use:

The new way I'll use it, and when:

Afterwards: how did it go, and how did it feel?

05 Strengths that can overdo it

Any strength can tip over when you lean on it too hard. Kind can become people-pleasing (if that one rings true, the people-pleasing worksheet goes further). Honest can become blunt, determined can become stubborn, hard-working can become burnt out, organised can become controlling, and funny can become a way to dodge hard feelings. Pick one or two of yours.

06 Looking back

Reading back over this page, what do I want to remember about myself on a hard day?

When you're done, a moment to reflect

- Which strength did you hesitate to tick, and what made you hesitate?
- Which strength do you show easily with others but rarely with yourself?
- Who in your life brings out your best qualities, and what do they do?
- Which strength has carried you through something hard?
- What would change this week if you trusted one of your strengths a little more?
